Edmondson, A, Bohmer, R and Pisano, G, Speeding Up Team Learning, Harvard Business Review Vol. 79(9) October 2001 pp. 125-132 (The most successful teams adapt quickly to new ways of working. Now, a study of 16 cardiac surgery teams offers intriguing insights on how to make that happen.)

"Effective" Health Care Teams have a Greater Ability to Improve Patient Care. An interview with Dr Stephen M Shortell, dean of the School of Public Health, University of California and Blue Cross of California distinguished professor of health policy and management. <http://www.rwjf.org/newsroom/featureDetail.jsp?featureID=947&type=3>

Fischer, B and Boynton, A, Virtuoso Teams, Harvard Business Review. Vol 83(7) July - August 2005, pp. 117-23 (Describes virtuoso teams as elite experts in their field specially convened for ambitious projects. Compares the characteristics of traditional teams and virtuoso teams to better understand what makes virtuoso teams succeed.)

Friedman, LH and Bernell, SL, The Importance of Team Level Tacit Knowledge and Related Characteristics of High-Performing Health Care Teams, Health Care Management Review, Vol. 31(3) July-September 2006 pp. 223-230 (Evaluates how tacit knowledge and related team characteristics influence the performance of cardiothoracic surgery teams. How might health care executives seek to build increasing levels of tacit knowledge into their organisation?)

Iedema, R, Meyerkort, S and White, L, Emergent Modes of Work and Communities of Practice, Health Services Management Research, Vol. Vol 18(1) February 2005 pp. 13-24. (Reviews the current notion of teams and communities of practice as a way of overcoming the challenges of, and realising health reform. Explains how communities of practice differ from teams, and why they have a central role in changing health care.)

Katzenbach, J R and Smith, D K, The Discipline of Teams, Harvard Business Review, Vol 83(7) July - August 2005, pp. 162,164-71 (Reprint of an article previously published in 1993. Discusses the differences between a working group which relies on individual contributions for group performance and teams which strive for something greater than its members could achieve individually.)

Meliones, J, Saving Money, Saving Lives, Harvard Business Review Vol. 78(6) 2000 pp. 57-62, 64, 66-67 (Turning around any organisation is hard work but it's even more difficult at a hospital. The chief medical director at one hospital needed to find a way to keep the mission lofty and the bottom line healthy. He realised that his hospital needed to start thinking less like a money losing non-profit and more like a profitable corporation. His tools were reams of data, a fresh approach to teamwork - and the balanced scorecard.)
